Thai Elephant (Elephas maximus)

- They acted as vehicles for wars in Thailand during the nineteenth century. They are used for transportation and heavy work.
- White elephants are stated to be precious and they represent royal and official emblems.
- During 1921, King Vajiravudh (Rama VI) had passed a decree, making a law which protects wild elephant called The Wild Elephant Protection Act. This decree states that elephants are property of the government and ministry of interior (which acts as representative of the king). In addition, people would have to present white elephant to the king.
- Decree is มาตรา

Sala Thai

• The other name of sala thai is known as Thai-style pavilion. It shows the beauty of Thailand which is different from other countries.

Emblem of Thailand (Phaya Krut/ Garuda)

• Garuda is half human and half bird from the myth called Himmapan forest. Furthermore, they are a figure that was brought up from Hinduism and Buddhism. This symbol is used to represent royal family and authority and is referred to "krut pha" in Thai. In addition, it has human body and arms, a fierce or evil looking face, and bird's wings, legs, and tails. It is dressed up with gold accessories which are a crown, bracelets, armbands, a necklace, and a loincloth.

Loincloth is a single piece of cloth wrapped around hip.

Torso is the trunk of human body.

Demonic means evil, demon, or fierce.
